WOLF ROAD INJUNCTION SUSTAINED

The hearing on the motion on the part of Will County thru their attorney A. H. Krusemark for the dissolution of the temporary injunction restraining the County from proceeding with the condemnation proceedings for a right of way for Wolf road thru the Cleveland school property, was argued all day Monday before Judge Wilson in the Will County Circuit Court. C. M. Cleveland and the school directors of the school district were represented by attorneys Wm. D. Heise and George N. Blatt. Technical points of law were argued and the debates became so hot at times that the Judge had to rap for order.

The school directors set up in their bill ten alleged points of fraud on the part of the county to secure the needed right of way. They also contend that the State Highway Department did not know that part of the Wolf road right of way would run thru school property at the time the state approved the survey for a straight route.

Judge Wilson refused to dissolve the injunction and the county will have to present evidence to combat the charges of fraud. The next case will probably come up in two weeks. The school directors also claim the straight route would cost the county $20,000 more than if another route were taken and that Wolf road has no direct outlet.

The Wolf road boosters point out that if the opposing faction against the straight Wolf road route are so anxious for the county to save money, why don't they quit their court fights and thus save the county legal fees?

Wolf road has an outlet by going straight to the Lincoln Highway and thence south to Route 51.

The Wolf road advocates stand firm for no deviation from the straight route and if the road is held up by the school squabble, the unfinished portion of Wolf road will serve as a monument to the selfish interests of the obstructionists.

Wolf road must go straight and no other way can be considered as the Wolf road in order to be a highway of real service must be on a straight route and hook up with other important paved roads and thus serve as an outer belt highway in the Chicago area.

Mokena Community Council Organized

For many years the churches and civic organizations have been experiencing difficulty in holding social functions as often two affairs would be given the same night, thus cutting down the attendance of both. In order to overcome this, N. F. Heiman, president of the Mokena PTA called a meeting at the Mokena School Auditorium Monday night to which every social, fraternal order, civic organization and the several churches were invited to send their representatives.

The response was 100 per cent, and a fine spirit of co-operation was manifested. After discussing the matter a Community Council was organized to act as a clearing house for monthly dates. This Council, thru its executive committee will each month frame a calendar of dates for the ensuing month and this calendar will be published in this paper the latter part of the month preceding the month the dates are given for and the calendar of dates will also be displayed at the Mokena State Bank and the real estate office of Ona E. McGovney. The calendar will show on what date there will be a social function outside of the regular monthly meetings of churches and lodges. By glancing at this calendar of dates, any organization can tell off hand whether the date they are planning to hold a function, is taken or not.

Any group wishing to set a date gets in touch with the committee consisting of N. F. Heiman, Ona E. McGovney and Wm. Semmler and their date is listed. All this service is free.

The groups represented at the meeting Monday evening were as follows:

Opera Season Opens In Chicago Scores Again

Maria Jeritza, Austrian soprano, who won new honors when the Chicago Grand Opera Company opened the Chicago Opera season last Saturday at the Civic Opera House. The season runs six weeks.

What is predicted to be one of the most brilliant seasons in the twenty-three years of opera history in Chicago opened last Saturday night at the Civic Opera House. The pomp and circumstance which has in the past always characterized the opening of opera in Chicago was accentuated by the glittering jewels and gowns and formal attire of the men and women of Chicago's elite.

The occasion, which opened the second season of the revival of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, was a gay one with every seat in the great cathedral of opera taken. The opera selected for the opening night was Puccini's posthumous "Turandot", one of the greatest spectacles of the lyric stage. Maria Jeritza, famous Austrian soprano, sang the title role as the princess who sought revenge. Frederick Jagel, American tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made his debut with the Chicago Company and scored new honors as the unknown prince who wins the chaste and pure Turandot.

The opera season, which brings together the finest cast ever assembled in a Chicago company, will extend for six weeks with the final performance on Dec. 22. It will feature such names as Jeritza, Somigli (debut), Turkel debut, LaMance debut, Edith Mason, Hilda Burke, Elizabeth Rethberg, Jean Tennyson Martinelli, Jagel, Coe Glade, Lawrence Tibbett, Morelli and a score of others. The management has adopted a policy of doing only those operas of proven popularity. (continued back page)

Several Hundred At Ev. Brotherhood Convention, Mokena

Several hundred members of the Evangelical Brotherhoods of the Mokena district comprised of 19 churches, attended the Brotherhood convention held at the St. John Evangelical in Mokena Sunday afternoon and evening.

The afternoon was devoted mainly to business matters and installation of officers.

Rev. John M. G. Darms, D. D., Secretary of the Reformed Churchmen's League addressed the convention. He declared that the combined membership of the Evangelical Brotherhoods equals the standing army of the United States and then pointed out what an influence for good the Brotherhoods can be if they respond to the spirit of Christ. In the evening service Dr. Darms delivered a most masterful address in which he declared that we are living in extraordinary times and that the world needs the spirit of Christ more today than ever before and that many of the churches have been dead and need a real awakening.

The Mokena public school, Gerald Dunn, principal.

All groups represented pledged to support the Community Council and feel the plan as outlined is a very practical one.

Sedan Prairie 4-H Club Presents A Fine Play

The Sunshine 4-H Club of Sedan Prairie climaxed its year's achievement in 4-H Club Work with the presentation of the 3-Act play, "That's One On Bill" at the Tinley Park School Auditorium on Wednesday evening, November 14.

These young folks, under the leadership of Mrs. Hilda Kampe, entertained a crowd of some 500 people with one of the snappiest plays ever presented.

Lil Haily, played by Linda Twietmeyer, concocted a plot to get her frivolous brother, Bill Haily (played by Wm. Schmeckpeper) to fall in love with Mab Ellen, a quiet but charming girl. Sylvia Feigel played the part of Mab Ellen. $50,000 was the amount that Bill was to receive from his Uncle Jimmie (Hilbert Strausenburg) if he did marry the girl. It looked for a time that the plot was going to be a boomerang for Lil Haily because a movie actress, Patricia Niles, played by Ruth Schumacher, was the center character in the plot. However, by the time the play ended young Uncle Jimmie won the actress and each of the other principals in the play received their $50,000.

All of the characters in the play were important and played their parts very well. Those participating in the play were as follows:

Uncle Jimmie, a young bachelor, Hilbert Strausenburg
Bill Haily, his nephew, William Schmeckpeper
Battling Bennie, Bozo, a pugilist, Martin Hotchkin
Harry Dover, engaged to Lil, George Feigel
Ned Collins (Puffy) too rich to work, Norman Hoyer
Patricia Niles (Patricia Pansy La Gloria), Ruth Schumacher
Lil Haily, her friend, Linda Twietmeyer.

Mab Ellen, Uncle's choice for Bill, Sylvia Feigel
Mrs. Haily, Mother of Lil and Bill, Lillian Dettmering
Rosie, a German maid, Elsie Feigel

Opening and intermission numbers were Spanish Guitar, Uke and Hawaiian Guitar numbers by Alvin Kohl and Elda Schilling, Don Carlos Hall and sisters, and Mrs. Kampe and her two sons, Arthur and George.

Mrs. Kampe and her Club members wish to thank the people of the Tinley Park community for their support in this 4-H Club achievement program, and to Mr. Hollstein the teacher of the Sedan Prairie school, for his help in presenting the play.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—It has been seldom since President Roosevelt took the helm of government that Washington has witnessed such an upheaval of conditions and plans as has occurred in the last few weeks. Part of the changes result naturally enough from development of plans for submission of new national policies to congress which will convene again in about six weeks. The other part comes from a sudden determination by the administration to revise its recovery methods.

Possibly the most significant of the forthcoming changes in recovery plans is the determination to try, at least, to get away from direct relief. Instead of plain gifts of money, the administration is now seeking to find additional means for creating work so that individuals needing help may obtain their relief in the form of jobs for which the government will pay.

Officials still are loath to discuss exact figures, but they are, nevertheless, going steadily forward with plans for converting the vast federal relief machinery into an extensive program that will embrace such things as slum clearance, low cost housing and rural rehabilitation.

Mr. Roosevelt will wait until the last moment before he fixes in his own mind how many hundreds of millions of dollars will be needed to carry out these projects. The total cost obviously will depend somewhat upon how quickly the dole can be abandoned. It may run into billions of dollars because, according to some authorities, removal from the dole is going to be opposed by certain types of persons. And, it seems, they can hardly be blamed because once the government altered its traditional policy and made direct gifts of money it created a new psychology and the people who benefited thereby quite naturally will be unwilling to have the source of the gifts closed for this easy manner of living.

One of the plans under consideration as a part of the whole program is provision for employment by direct federal subsidy for housing. Under this plan, the government would advance part of the cost for individual homes of low price construction. Estimates said to be in the hands of the President indicate that an expenditure of $1,500,000,000 in this manner would release more than three times that amount in private capital and give work to an estimated four million persons.

In keeping with the theory that the number on relief rolls will descend in direct proportion to the revival of private construction, advocates of this plan contend that the cost would be less than outright relief. They say that with the government advancing part of the funds needed, private lending agencies would feel more secure and would offer aid in the form of the remainder of the loans necessary.

It has long been recognized that recovery cannot be accomplished without a tremendous increase in construction. Private construction, however, will not go forward in a period of uncertainty now no more than it has in other years and the experts have decided that the government must take the lead in this direction. They have advised the President there can be no real upturn in private building operations unless a start is made by the government. Whether this is the right theory, of course, none can foretell. It may turn out to be that the government is pouring additional funds down just another rat-hole as it has on numerous other occasions in the course of recovery experiments. My conversations with men both in public and private life, men who are qualified to judge, lead me to believe that there will be considerable construction resulting from this program. The conclusions which have been expressed to me, it must be said frankly, do not indicate that there will be any such total of new construction development under the new administration program as the enthusiastic exponents of the program now contend.

There are numerous reasons for these conclusions as they have been explained to me. One of these reasons, and perhaps the most important, is that no one is going to build a house unless he feels that he can continue to pay for it. With depression conditions prevailing and with hundreds of thousands of potential home owners now without reserves or resources of any kind the market for homes naturally is limited. That is to say there are hundreds of thousands of families who would like to have homes but who have no way of acquiring them.

Another road which the administration is now following in its efforts to cause money to flow more freely is the recent ruling easing restrictions on bank loans. Heretofore, banks have not been permitted to make loans of more than 10 per cent of their capital and surplus for industrial purposes to one borrower. The treasury now has abrogated that provision, long regarded as a sound banking ruling, and has told the banks they may loan more than 10 per cent provided the amount loaned above 10 per cent is guaranteed by the Reconstruction Finance corporation or the federal reserve system. Treasury officials think this will encourage banks to extend additional credit.

It happened that on almost the same day that the treasury policy was announced, one of the largest banks in the United States reported privately that one of its vice presidents had returned from a six weeks' scouting trip in an effort to find places where it could loan money. This man visited important cities in 16 states. He is a practical banker and he is thoroughly acquainted with the means of approach to potential borrowers. But his six weeks' tour netted one loan application.

That banks' report may sound silly because there are so many people that need money. Yet, it must be remembered that a bank is trustee for the funds placed in its care by its depositors and it cannot hand out money with reckless abandon. It must feel reasonably sure that there will be a repayment, and this was the thing which the bank's vice president failed to find. There were plenty of individuals and corporations that needed money but they had no security to offer and little to guarantee that they could repay the borrowed funds.

Financial experts, therefore, are not unduly excited about the latest treasury ruling which was released with much gusto and with statements that this will free "many hundreds of millions" to business. I am told that the banks are chock-full of loose cash. Reports to the treasury certainly indicate that to be a fact. But when borrowers who need money have no security and when business is at such a low ebb that only the minimum of funds is needed, I believe it can hardly be said that the bankers are wholly to blame. The bankers have been vigorously criticized in the last four or five years and obviously a considerable spanking was due them. On the other hand, I think it is a plain statement of fact that you can no more force people to borrow than you can make a horse drink after you have led him to the trough.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, North Dakota Progressive Republican, has started a speaking tour that, as far as I can find, is without precedent. The senator is chairman of the special senate committee named to investigate the munitions, aircraft, and shipbuilding industries, to determine whether these businesses have been active in fomenting trouble between the nations of the world. The committee has held hearings covering a period of three weeks, and the hearings will be resumed later with the prospect that they may run on for many months.

Senator Nye is making a series of six speeches in the United States and one in Canada, dealing with the question of who really starts wars. He has announced that he desires to tell the country how nations are driven into conflict and the inference is, of course, that he believes munition makers and others producing material for war are at the bottom of the heap.

But the point is that Mr. Nye personally is an advocate of government ownership of all plants now engaged in the production of anything used in wars between nations. He is authentically reported to have a draft of legislation in mind which he will present to the forthcoming congress. He is not alone in holding this belief for at least four other members of his committee entertain the same general trend of mind. There are seven members of the committee so that it is apparent the Nye plan will have a majority of that committee supporting it if and when it is presented to the senate.

I have examined records rather comprehensively in an effort to discover whether ever before any senator or member of the house had gone out to the country with an appeal for support of legislation under a circumstance such as this. The committee had three or four months more of investigation ostensibly to ascertain all pertinent facts. Despite the fact that the senate has voted money for the committee to make this investigation and the money will be spent at hearings, Senator Nye has proceeded to make known his views in advance.

Disclosures made by the committee thus far have been accepted generally, I think, as showing there was some fire as the cause of the smoke. Certain testimony given before that committee linked some of the American munitions makers with foreign interests whose designs were of a political character. It was shown how some of the foreign agents had attempted to provoke trouble between nations of Europe and the logical assumption is that if such activities occurred in two or three instances, they must have occurred in many others. Nevertheless, there is a considerable amount of criticism heard in Washington about Senator Nye's plan of action because, it is contended by these critics, it is hard to see how the senator can conduct an unbiased investigation after having committed himself in this unequivocal way.

Another road which the administration is now following in its efforts to cause money to flow more freely is the recent ruling easing restrictions on bank loans. Heretofore, banks have not been permitted to make loans of more than 10 per cent of their capital and surplus for industrial purposes to one borrower. Lesson for November 18

THE CHRISTIAN AS A CHURCH MEMBER

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 5:13-16; Acts 2:41-47.
GOLDEN TEXT—For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones.—Ephesians 5:30.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Praising God in His House.
JUNIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Be a Church Member.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Join the Church?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Learning From the Early Church.

The two Scripture texts selected by the lesson committee are not quite of the same import. The one from Matthew has to do with the relation of Christ's disciples to the world, especially his disciples as members of the Messianic kingdom. The so-called Sermon on the Mount, from which this unit is taken, sets forth the laws which will obtain in Christ's kingdom. This should be recognized in strictness of interpretation, while at the same time these vital truths have a definite relation to the members of Christ's body. There is a close connection, however, since Jesus Christ is the center in both cases. In the first, he is the reigning King, and in the second, the Head of the organism called the Church.

I. The Relation of Christ's Disciples to the World (Matt. 5:13-16).

The disciples are to live such lives as will enlighten, purify, and preserve. The responsibilities of the subjects of the kingdom are set forth under the figures of salt, light, and a city.

1. "Ye are the salt of the earth" (v. 13). Salt arrests and prevents the progress of corruption. Three properties are outstanding: a. Penetrating. b. Purifying. c. Preserving.

As salt, the disciples of Christ should penetrate, purify, and preserve society. The Christian should not go into seclusion; he should remain in the world, but not be a part of it.

2. "Ye are the light of the world" (v. 14). Light illuminates and warms. Its gift is guidance. The world in which the Christian lives is cold and dark. Many are the pitfalls and snares set by the devil. Christians should so live, should so let their light shine, as to prevent the unwary ones from falling into them.

3. "A city set on a hill" (v. 14). By a city is suggested a governmental and social order. Christian character and service should be such as to give the influence of the hill-lifted city. Christianity was not intended to be hidden.

II. The Christian Church an Evangelizing Agency (Acts 2:41).

It is not enough that believers should receive the life of God and enjoy the blessings of his grace, but they should evangelize the world. The Great Commission (Matt. 28:18-20) makes it clear that disciples should be made of all the nations, and that such disciples should be baptized and then taught to render obedience unto God. It is characteristic of a saved man that he proclaims the salvation enjoyed to those who are lost. The unmistakable proof of the experiencing of the life of God is that the good news is being proclaimed.

III. A Portrait of the Primitive Church (Acts 2:42-47).

1. They continued in the apostles' doctrine (v. 42). Instead of being taught by the scribes, they were now taught by new teachers, the apostles of Christ.

2. They continued in fellowship around Christ their Head (v. 42). The "breaking of bread" illustrated the oneness of believers in Christ.

3. They continued in prayer (v. 42). The ideal church is a praying church.

4. They "were together" (v. 44). They were together because they were baptized by the Holy Spirit into the one body, of which Christ was Head (1 Cor. 12:13). The oneness of this body was symbolized by the breaking of bread.

5. They had community of goods (vv. 44, 45). They sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. This proved that they were under the power of the Holy Spirit, that is, that the supernatural was being manifested; for it is not natural to abandon one's title to possessions.

6. They were filled with gladness and singleness of heart (v. 46). All those who have had the experience of the life of God being poured into them are filled with praise, and gratitude must express itself.

7. "Favor with all the people" (v. 47). Such unselfishness gained the attention of the people, inducing them to yield themselves to God, and thus God added unto them daily such as were being saved.

Let us not forget that "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it . . . that it should be holy and without blemish."

The Real God

To some people God is the great and terrible God. Their souls are filled with awe at the thought of him, and they say with Jacob, "How dreadful is this place." To others he is a God of gentleness, mercy, a Father that pitieth his children, a Counselor and familiar Friend.

Christians

I have often thought that the best of Christians are found in the worst of times.—John Bunyan.

Dealing With "Calf Love"

Phase of Adolescent Life That Is Very Real to Those Involved; Situation Calls for Tenderness on the Part of Parents.

Harold P. Page, director of Y. M. C. A. boys' work, has proved himself a sage. In an article appearing in the The Parents' Magazine he warns mothers and fathers that they need not hope to escape contact with "Calf Love." They may deplore it, they may ignore it, they may try to laugh it off, but just so long as boys will be boys and there are girls in the offing, just so long there will continue to take place this phenomena of adolescent life to which the scornfully good-humored term is applied. In the opinion of this close observer of youth in his charge, this form of love is a beautiful, often wondrously moving drama, when put on by two clean-minded normal young people.

"Acknowledge its presence within the family circle," pleads Mr. Page, "greet it with dignity, with assurance, with sympathetic understanding."

"The boy and girl in love are in the grip of a cyclonic force. If you are wise you will make no attempt to play the superman or superwoman at this time," warns the director and astutely sets forth several common methods of parental attack which he believes are certain to miss fire.

"To deny the existence of 'calf love' by donning a mask of cold reserve smacks of cowardice," he flatly declares. "It only successfully erects a false barrier between parent and child that the latter will silently resent and as silently question its presence."

"Any challenge to reason is futile, because reason plays an insignificant part in 'calf love,' if indeed it is present at all. Pure feeling has taken its place."

"Ridicule is a cruel way of meeting the situation. It inflicts wounds which hardly, if ever heal, and may result in an utterly false appraisal by the young person of the intrinsic beauty of his love that may forever mar his relations with members of the other sex."

"A furtive approach will madden the young lover who considers a natural and intimate matter the object of a hidden attack."

"Force is futile and fatal during the flowering of a fragile emotion." With keen comprehension of the peculiar need of youth during this period when a comparatively simple existence has suddenly been infinitely complicated, Mr. Page urges the substitution of tenderness for parental authority, and urges fathers and mothers to remember their own adolescence and the physiological causes and changes involved.

"Be frank with your boys and girls. Help them to grow up emotionally. Put a good book on sex into their hands. Above all, open your homes for good times and entertainments and see that the two young persons involved are together—for together they'll be—under your roof."

Sane advice, if you ask us. Mr. Page speaks with the knowledge gained by years of contact with other parents and sons as well as with the wisdom born of intimacy with two boys of his own with whom he must some day squarely face the problems of "calf love."

Religion at Vassar

Students at Vassar college are showing a revival of interest in religion. More of them have enrolled in courses in the religious department than ever before.

The Vassar Community church, non-sectarian, is administered by a student committee, with ex-officio members, including Dr. Henry Noble McCracken, president, and the head of the religious department. This year a rabbi and a negro minister, in addition to representatives of various denominations, will be heard. —Literary Digest.

RUBBER AND GOLDENROD

The rubber content of any species of goldenrod is entirely in its leaves. Loren G. Polhamus of the United States Department of Agriculture found, after analyzing 24 species of goldenrod. Hence if goldenrod is to be cultivated as a source of rubber, only those varieties should be chosen that have plenty of leaves. The next matter for consideration is the rubber content of the leaf tissues.

Of all the species of goldenrod examined by Polhamus, that known botanically as Solidago altissima, a widely distributed variety occurring from New England through Michigan to Kansas, showed the highest per cent of rubber in its dried leaves. However, there is considerable variation as to rubber content in a single species, for while the best of the specimens of Solidago altissima showed 6.34 per cent of rubber in its dried leaves, the average rubber content of the leaves of all of the samples of this variety examined was 3.45 per cent.

Why Children Need a Liquid Laxative

The temporary relief children get from unwise dosing with harsh cathartics may cause bowel strain, and even set-up irritation in the kidneys. A properly prepared liquid laxative brings a more natural movement. There is no discomfort at the time and no weakness after. You don't have to give the child "a double dose" a day or two later.

Can constipation be safely relieved in children? "Yes!" say medical men. "Yes!" say many mothers who have followed this sensible medical advice: 1. Select a good liquid laxative. 2. Give the dose you find suited to the system. 3. Gradually reduce the dose, if repeated, until the bowels are moving naturally without aid.

An approved liquid laxative (one that is widely used for children) is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. The mild laxative action of this excellent preparation is the best form of help for children—and grown-ups, too. The dose can be regulated for any age or need.

The Voice of the American Legion

By The Tinley Park Post No. 615
THE NEW UNDERSTANDING

The Michigan Department last year, held a state-wide radio initiation of 100 members. Every Post does not have accessibility to a broadcasting station. There was not one available, either, when its members marched off to war—but the home folk knew and understood them. They can impress their own people with their Legionism and high ideals in no better way than to hold a public initiation with impressive ceremony.

Here is the way one mother felt about the Michigan ceremony. According to the radio chairman, Harry I. Dingeman, the general response to the program was inspiring. The mother's letter in part:

"We want to congratulate you on your wonderful radio initiation of 100 World War veterans. My two boys, 16 and 12, were thrilled with the prompt reply of the men and most of all, something we did not know before, what the Legion stands for."

"The boys wish me to tell you that the oath was so clean and manly, one could not go far wrong and live up to The American Legion oath. The boys said they wished the public schools had a program like the Legion, and the children had some oath of loyalty to the schools and each other. It might stop the crime wave that is getting such a hold on the high schools."

"I am proud of my boys. They are clean and enjoy a program like the one we heard tonight. As a mother I want to congratulate you on your splendid work. Would it be asking too much for a copy of the four points of the Legion oath as a keepsake?"

There is food for thought in the suggestion of a school oath, and in this mother's request for the Legion oath. Would not others who do not understand the Legion be interested if the Legion post held an impressive initiation for the public to witness? It is in a manner such as this, and such as the holding of public programs, that folk in general will learn to know the real American Legion.

HONOR SOCIETY

One of the outstanding activities of the American Legion, has been the co-operation of the various Posts with the local school boards, in furthering the educational facilities in their communities, and awarding the American Legion National School Award to the girls and boys of the grade schools.

"Since in several of the State Departments winners of the School Awards have been organized into societies; it has been

"Resolved, that the Americanism Commission encourage the formation of a national society to be called the Legion Honor Society."

THE AMERICAN SCHOOL

The next time you pass a school, pause a moment to think what that school means to humanity. Recall the long dark centuries when the masses were kept in ignorance—when greed and oppression ruled the world with an iron hand. From the very beginning of man's struggle for knowledge, self-respect, and the recognition of his inalienable rights, the school has been his greatest ally. We refer to the school as "common" because it belongs to us all; it is ourselves working together in the education of our children. But it is most uncommon institution. It is relatively new. It is democracy's greatest gift to civilization. Throughout the world, among upward struggling peoples, wherever parents share in the aspirations of their children, the American common school is being copied. Let us cherish and improve our schools.

The children in 5B were having their arithmetic examination. Little Virginia was the last to finish her problems and turn in her paper. Instead of signing her own name to the paper, she had inscribed that of a well-known actress.

"Why did you sign the name of Mae West to your problems?" her teacher asked.

"Cause I think I done 'em wrong."

The teacher was examining the class in Nature Study. "Now, children, while we are on the subject of sheep, can any of you tell me the names of the male, female and the offspring?"

"You bet, teacher," was the confident reply of one little boy. "Ram—the daddy, Dam—the mammy and Lam—the kid."

Red Cross Work Important Says Public Service Surgeon

DR. HART E. FISHER
Chief Surgeon of the Medical Bureau,
Public Service Company of Northern Illinois.

"That work," said Dr. Fisher, "is the fostering of first aid training. When emergency strikes, it is important that someone know what to do until the doctor comes. Inspired by the Red Cross, more than a million men and women throughout the country are familiar with first aid, particularly the Schaefer method of artificial respiration. The result is that a large number of people are alive today who would otherwise have lost their lives through accidents."

"In the Public Service Company, our employees are trained in first aid using the Red Cross' excellent book on that subject. Time and again this training has been responsible for the saving of human life. Employees have used their first aid knowledge, especially the Schaefer method to save nearly fifty lives among the public in the last few years."

"Teams selected from among employees trained in first aid have completed regularly in the Red Cross Annual First Aid Contest for industries and other organizations sponsoring first aid. Public Service teams competing in the Red Cross contests have later given any number of demonstrations before schools, boy scout groups, club, police and fire departments and civic organizations."

With the work of the Red Cross spreading its acts of mercy in many directions, the importance of contributing to the Annual Roll Call cannot be overemphasized in the opinion of Dr. Fisher.

May Have to Close

Cook Co., Schools

More than a third of the Cook county schools outside of Chicago, will have to close at once unless funds are forthcoming from the state, it is announced by Otto Aken, county superintendent of schools. The trouble is due to the failure of the state administration to distribute more than $8,000,000 due schools from the state distributive fund. Other school districts in the state may have to dismiss their fall classes unless the condition is quickly remedied.

Sales Tax May Be Extended Indefinitely

The special session of the general assembly, called by Gov. Horner to extend the life of the sales tax beyond July 1, 1935, is expected to convene next Tuesday. The governor hopes that it will clean up its task in about two weeks and adjourn. Just what will happen is a matter of conjecture.

The Horner sales tax was a definite issue in the state campaign and the fact that the Democrats were whipped in the total number of votes cast outside the city of Chicago, leads some observers to believe that the assembly may balk against following the governor's orders.

Quite a number of Democrats from downstate are opposed to the extension of the sales tax.

Great pressure will be put on the legislature by the railroads and the large Chicago property owners to force through the governor's bills because the sales tax of more than $40,000,000 a year will go to replace the average collection of $24,000,000 a year from the old property tax. Gov. Horner's anxiety to put his plan through is said to be actuated by a wish to relieve the big property owners and at the same time get from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year more to spend in the interest of the Chicago Democratic machine.

So far, the governor has refused to include any other subjects in his call. It is possible that he may issue a supplementary call, but it is also possible that, with the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays in the offing, he may have trouble getting the sales tax extension bills through before the first of the year.

Earl Noard of Wethersfield won the Henry county corn husking contest at Atkinson, with a net load of 30.62 bushels. William Rose, the defending champion, was second with 29.66 bushels.

Bobby, twenty-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George Stephenson of Belleville, was rescued by firemen and volunteer diggers from the bottom of a dry well where he spent nearly six hours.

O. G. Scott was overpowered and then tied up in the Springfield Finance and Thrift company, of which he is the manager, during the noon hour by a robber who looted the safe and fled with approximately $300.

Wesley Brown, twenty, formerly of Rock Island, was sentenced to one to fourteen years in Joliet prison after pleading guilty in Kewanee to a charge of manslaughter in an automobile accident which police said occurred during a holdup. The charge was based on the death of John Gapsis, a Moline taxi driver.

The Cary State bank at Cary, in the southeast corner of McHenry county, was held up by four men armed with pistols and a machine gun, who escaped with $3,000. As the robbers sped east on the Northwest highway through Fox River grove, two ex-service men who had been warned by telephone exchanged shots with them.

A story of illicit romance that ended in tragedy was unfolded at the inquest into the deaths of John Kanchowsky, forty-five years old, insurance salesman, and his wife, Katherine, thirty-five years old, of Bensenville. A Du Page county coroner's jury decided that Kanchowsky had shot his wife to death in a fit of jealousy and then committed suicide on their chicken farm in Bensenville.

Application blanks for 1935 automobile licenses have been issued. This may be the last year that motorists are compelled to pay the present Illinois registration fees. Since the depression nineteen states have cut their rates. There is strong sentiment for the general assembly meeting in Springfield in January to reduce automobile taxes. The color scheme for the new plates is navy blue numerals on a battleship gray background.

James Allen, forty-four years old, of Chicago, and Herbert Guth, thirty-seven years old, of Elgin, were held in Elgin, charged with the theft of approximately 9,000 chickens in Kane and Du Page counties and the western part of Cook county since last spring. Allen and Guth confessed that they had looted some 350 chicken farms during the last seven months. The arrests followed an investigation of six weeks in which Du Page, Kane and McHenry county authorities joined.

A slice of $1,049,015 has been cut from the $12,308,864 requested from the federal government to help meet Illinois November relief needs, but the total of federal and local funds for next month—$12,366,707—still tops all previous records. This amount was approved by members of the Illinois Emergency Relief commission, after which they were warned by Howard O. Hunter, district representative of the Federal Emergency Relief administration, that Uncle Sam cannot keep up the pace much longer.

Plans to ask the next legislature to form a new Illinois county of eleven suburban townships near Chicago were outlined at a public meeting in the North Shore hotel in Evanston. The proposed county would include the townships of Evanston, New Trier, Maine, Barrington, Elk Grove, Hanover, Niles, Northfield, Palatine, Schaumburg, and Wheeling. It would be 350 square miles in area, have 155,000 people, and would comprise real estate with a tax valuation of $600,000,000. William Lister, Evanston corporation counsel, said such a county would be able to keep out liquor and racketeering, eliminate outside police interference in legal cases, reduce taxes, increase real estate valuations, and gain home rule.

A committee appointed by Governor Horner, meeting in Chicago in the office of the chairman, Attorney Charles P. Schwartz, set about a campaign to make citizens of resident aliens. Illinois is the first state to launch such a program. There are 350,000 persons in Illinois eligible to become citizens who have not done so, according to figures cited by Chairman Schwartz from the 1930 census. Many of these are illiterates, whose lack of education and of interest in government constitutes both a danger and an expense to the state. Among those at the meeting were Mrs. Kenneth F. Rich of the Immigrants' Protective league; William J. Bogan, superintendent of the Chicago schools; Frank Loomis of the Chicago Community Trust; Joseph Lisack of the state industrial commission; Fred J. Schotfeldt of the federal division of immigration, and Arvinder Toigo of the Illinois committee on citizenship and naturalization.

Joseph J. Bellinger, one of the last five surviving members of Aurora post, No. 20, of the Grand Army of the Republic, died in his home in Plano after an illness of several months. He was eighty-six years old.

A constitutional convention to bring about reforms in the Illinois school laws was urged at Carbondale in a resolution approved by the Southern division of the Illinois State Teachers' association. The division recommended an increase of the Illinois state distributive fund for schools to $30,000,000 and urged a continuance of the sales tax.

Rat Shoots Self and Records Fatal Event

THIS is the "Rube Goldberg" contraption rigged up by George W. Fenner of Syracuse, N. Y., a photographer, whereby a rat killed itself as it took bait that fired a gun, at the same time photographing the event. At one end of the novel trap the bait was suspended from a wire. Pulling the bait released a catch which dropped a hammer operated by a spring. This tripped the trigger of the revolver. The shot not only killed the rat but cut a piece of string, releasing a spring, which set off the flashlight. A watch close to the revolver showed the time of the death of the rat and the taking of the picture.

JENNY WREN TELLS WHO THE STRANGER IS

THE longer Peter Rabbit stared at the stranger in the Old Orchard, the more he realized how mistaken he had been in thinking that he was dressed all in black. Now that Peter was so near he could see that the stranger was speckled all over with tiny light spots. Underneath he was dark brownish-gray. His wings and tail were the same color, with little touches of buff. His rather large bill was yellow.

Peter hurried back to Jenny Wren, and, it must be confessed, he looked sheepish. "You were right, Jenny Wren. He isn't black at all," confessed Peter.

"Of course I was right. I usually am," retorted Jenny. "He isn't black, he isn't even related to the Blackbird family, and he hasn't any business in

"He is Speckles the Starling and He Isn't Really an American at All," said this country, anyway. He's a foreigner. That's what he is, a foreigner."

"But you haven't told me who he is," protested Peter. "He is Speckles the Starling and he isn't really an American at all," replied Jenny. "He comes from across the ocean the same as Bully the English Sparrow. Thank goodness he hasn't such a quarrelsome disposition as Bully. Just the same, the rest of us here would be better satisfied if he were not here. He has taken possession of one of the old houses of Yellow Wing the Flicker, and that means one less house for birds who really belong here. If his family increases at the rate Bully's family does, I'm afraid some of us will be crowded out of the Old Orchard. Did you notice that yellow bill of his?"

Peter nodded. "I certainly did," he said. "I couldn't very well help noticing it."

"Well, there's a funny thing about that bill," replied Jenny. "In winter it turns almost black. Most of us wear a different colored suit in winter, but our bills remain the same."

"He seems to be pretty well fixed here, and I don't see but what the thing for the rest of you birds to do is to make the best of the matter," said

Peter. "What I want to know is, whether or not he is of any use?" "I guess he must be of some good," admitted Jenny Wren rather grudgingly. "I've seen him picking up worms and grubs, but he likes grain, and I have a suspicion that if his family becomes very numerous, and I suspect it will, they will eat more of Farmer Brown's grain than they will pay for by the worms and bugs they destroy. Hello! There's Dandy the Waxwing and his friends."

Mother's Cook Book

SAUCES FOR FISH AND MEATS

AN APPROPRIATE sauce to accompany any dish of whatever nature makes often a most ordinary one unusual. The common practice of using tomato in everything, good as it is, should not be overdone. A good tomato sauce used on a meat loaf or a dish of fish is always enjoyed; however, there are any number of equally good sauces which are seldom used.

Perhaps it is a form of laziness, this too common tomato sauce, for one may open a can of tomato soup, heat it, add a dash of this and that, and have a good sauce. As one travels over the country, meals become more and more afflicted with tomato in the salad, in the soup, in the sandwich, as sauce on fish and meat, all good, but why overdo a good thing until we dislike the sound of the name? The two sauces which are always enjoyed and may be varied indefinitely are white and brown sauce—we even use these in the preparation of the ubiquitous tomato sauce.

Brown Sauce.

When preparing a brown sauce which with its flavor and color adds much to most meat dishes, the flour is browned; it will be necessary to add more of it for thickening, as browning destroys a part of the thickening property, by dextrinizing the starch—that is, changing it to a form of sugar. Add liquid desired—a cupful to the usual two tablespoonfuls of flour and the same of butter, makes a fairly thick sauce; when browned flour is used add an extra tablespoonful. Broths of all kinds, especially chicken, make most delightful sauces.

Sauce Piquant.

To one cupful of brown sauce prepared with any good beef stock add one-half tablespoonful of chopped onion, one tablespoonful each of chopped caper and pickle with a dash of cayenne and a tablespoonful of vinegar.

The varieties of sauces depend entirely upon the resources of the cook, they may be three or four, or legion.

Origin of Tapioca

Tapioca is prepared from the starch made from the tuberous roots of the cassava or manioc plant. This plant is a native of South America, notes a writer in the Indiana Farmer's Guide. The cassava starch, separated from the fibrous and nitrogenous constituents of the roots, is spread, while in a moist condition, upon iron plates and with constant stirring exposed to such heat as causes a partial rupture of the starch granules in which they agglomerate into irregular pellets, becoming hard and translucent when cooled. In this condition, the starch forms the tapioca of commerce, a light, pleasant, digestible food.

HOW TO SHOOT

By Bob Nichols

Shooting Editor, Field and Stream

SOME upland gunners become good shots in spite of the fact that their guns do not fit them. What happens in their case is that through years of practice they fit themselves to their badly fitting guns. This makes learning a slow process. They would become better shots in shorter time if they began with a gun that fitted them.

If you already have a shotgun, here is an interesting test you can make to see how near it comes to fitting you: Get about half a dozen sheets of dark colored paper. Black building paper such as is used in the walls of frame dwellings is excellent for the purpose. The sheets should be about three feet square.

Select a site for your testing ground that has an absolutely safe background. You are going to make your test at night. The darker the night the better for your purpose. But you must make sure that no living thing will be endangered by your test shooting.

Against this safe background you now set up a light framework for your target sheets. Two 2 by 4's about six feet long may be driven into the ground about 30 inches apart. Drive them in just so that they make a secure support.

Now take a tin can, and cut a hole in its side about 1½ inches in diameter and near the bottom. Attach to the top edge of the tin can two pieces of wire, long enough to suspend the can from each 2 by 4 so that the hole in the can hangs directly behind the center of the black target sheet when it has been tacked lightly to the 2 by 4 posts.

Cut a small hole in the center of the target sheet, so that when you place a small bit of lighted candle in the bottom of the tin the light will shine through. And this tiny spot of light is all that you should see when you stand back about 15 yards, gun in hand, ready to make your test.

The night must be so dark, and the candle light must be so dim that you are quite unable to see your gun barrel. For your test shots must not be aimed consciously. They must be pointed instinctively.

In making the test, place only one shell in your gun. Bring your gun to shoulder deliberately and fire quickly. Keep your eyes intently on the small spot of light. Your eyes will guide your hands. Remember that the object is not to hit the center of the target consciously. What you are really after is to see whether your gun fits you well enough so that in your hands it points on the target unconsciously and instinctively.

After your first shot, go up and tack on another target. Shoot three targets before examining the results too closely. If you are conducting the test correctly, all three shots should strike in approximately the same sector on your targets.

If the shots show a tendency to be under the "bull's-eye" your gun has too much drop at the heel of the stock, or too much pitch downward at the barrel. Or both faults may be present. Unscrew the butt-plate and try a couple more shots with the gun this way. The usual butt-plate adds somewhat to the gun's pitch.

If your first three shots are over the "bull's-eye" then it is probable that your gun-stock is too straight and has too little drop at the heel. Or it may be that the comb is a trifle too high to suit you. Or again, it may mean that you are raising your head as you shoot—a bad habit that will always make one over-shoot. But if your gun shoots only a trifling two or three inches directly above the "bull's-eye"—let it alone. An upland gun should shoot this way to help catch up with the rise of the flushed bird.

If your gun shoots regularly to the left, your stock may be too long, or you may be holding out too far on the barrel. If to the right, your stock may be too short or you may be holding in too far on the barrel. Try it!

Wild Zoo Animals Would Make for Trees if Loose

What would happen if a zoo's entire collection of several thousand wild animals were suddenly set free in the midst of a metropolitan city? Except for the hysterical frenzy of the population when the news became current, nothing much would happen, according to Edmund Heller, director of the Milwaukee Washington park zoo.

The great man-eating tigers and lions would be the first to make for the bushes and trees. Unless they were cornered, they would probably not attack human beings. They would be the most dangerous of adversaries, but the instinct of caution, without which they would have long ago been exterminated, would prevent them from seeking out as prey a creature whose killing power they have long had reason to fear.

Bird That Dodges Bullets

One of the most common of local aquatic birds is the grebe, often called hell-diver. There is hardly an inland lake in the state that doesn't harbor at least one family of grebes during the summer season, writes a correspondent in the Detroit News. This is the bird that is able to dodge bullets if it happens to be watching the hunter, and for speed and quickness in diving it is in a class of its own.

European Thieves Go In for Large Scale Thefts

A man brought up at Chester asizes for stealing baggage was charged with no fewer than 77 different thefts, all committed since he had last come out of prison about eight months earlier. The value of the stolen goods was put at £1,300.

This is by no means a record. Recently a German named Peter Flink, who was sentenced at Cologne to eight years' penal servitude confessed to 435 separate thefts in one year, the value of the goods being £3,400.

In Paris a man named Foerschler was arrested and charged with three burglaries. He burst out laughing.

"Three burglaries. I have broken into 250 houses since my last birthday," he said, and by all accounts this boast seems to have been a true one.

Another Frenchman, Joseph Chicot, was a thief for five years before he was detected.

"I have committed a burglary almost every night for the past five years, except on Saturdays," Chicot said when arrested.

He had kept a diary with a careful record of some 1,500 crimes. The value of the stolen goods was noted in every case, and the total exceeded £20,000 (close to $100,000), according to Pearson's Weekly, London.

CHAPTER V

Jean Gerard regarded the desk in the gun room at High Ledges with pursed lips and angry eyes.

"Gee, but you make me mad!"

She addressed the piece of furniture as if it were maliciously responsible for her frustration. She wriggled a hairpin in the lock of the top drawer. Then with teeth set, she grasped the handles, jerked with all her strength. The drawer came out with a suddenness which sent her sprawling and scattered three letters from the desk onto the floor.

Ruefully she rubbed the back of her head. She knelt beside the drawer and eagerly examined its contents. There were several photographs of a pretty girl. One showed her in bouffant tulle on the back of a horse. Jean's eyes dilated.

"Circus rider!" she crooned. "Goody, I'll see one like her tomorrow." She turned the photograph over. On the back was scrawled:

"Miraculous escape. From Calico and Calloway to liberty and lo—Fondly, Milly."

"She's a cutie all right. I—" Jean gulped as a shadow fell across the photograph.

"Where's your uncle?"

The photograph fell from her hand and lay with piquant, smiling face upward as Jean stared at the scowling man who loomed over her.

"I—I don't know. Shall I try to find him, Mr. Calloway?"

Len Calloway removed his glance from the pictures and letters on the floor long enough to glare at her.

"Tell him I want to talk with him. Scram!"

Frightened at the grayness of his face, Jean fled. She scurried through the different rooms. Called. No answer. She had better go back and tell Mr. Calloway.

As she entered the gun room, one of the long French windows banged.

"He's gone. I guess that's that."

She dropped to her knees beside the drawer. Better put it back before anyone saw it. She scrambled up the contents. Where was the picture of the cutie circus rider? Gone. Had Mr. Calloway taken it? Why should he want it? Would her uncle be mad with her for having touched the desk?

"I'd better get a move on."

She hurriedly replaced the drawer, picked up the letters. Only two! There had been three when they fell. Had Mr. Calloway snatched one? What would he do with it? "Gee, have I started something?" she thought.

In the library after dinner, Rodney Gerard glanced at Jean speculatively as she bent demurely over a book. Her absorption was out of character. She was too quiet. She had been prying with rather frightening results; he recognized the symptoms.

He glanced about the room as he refilled his pipe. Good room. Big, yet not too full of things, mellow, dignified. Not too bad a place in which to spend part of a winter. He glanced at his sister-in-law knitting rapidly in the light of one of the softly shaded lamps. Not so restful. He was in for battle. He'd better go to it.

Mrs. Walter Gerard looked up. She laid down her knitting.

"I have planned to close the house

der his feet, and that's where she would be.

"I appreciate your kindness, Annie, but Jim Armstrong, one of my roommates at college, who is a forester, will arrive soon to look over the timber and advise me as to what should come out. I hate like the dickens to say it, you have been so kind to keep house for me this summer, but I would prefer not to have you here."

Jean flung herself at Gerard.

"Hey there, Kurious Kid, go slow. Want to push me into the fire?" The girl's grip tightened.

"Uncle Rod, please let me stay with you, please! I'm not going to school this winter anyway. I hate New York, and Mother and Father are always fighting, and I love to be with you, and I'll be a perfect lady, honest I will. Please let me stay. I'm—I'm always sort of peaceful with you."

Gerard's eyes were tender as he looked down at the pleading face. Peaceful. Poor, lonely kid. She did have a tough time. Not much fun living with her parents. Walter rarely came to High Ledges now. Was it too dull for him, or were there other reasons? Should he let Jean stay? He was fond of the funny little thing, Prue Schuyler was taking an interest in her; she was making her happier, more human than the impish child she had been.

"What say, Annie? Will you let Jean stay with me until after Christmas? No," he anticipated, as his sister-in-law started to speak, "it will upset my plans to have you here; besides, you should be in New York with Walter."

"Walter doesn't want me, either."

For the first time since he had known her, Rodney heard Annie Gerard acknowledge defeat. Mighty hard on her. Walter was a bad egg, of course, but she had a cruel tongue and was so affected. That didn't excuse Walter; a man should be true to his wife no matter how she developed—but the gods be praised, the problem of being true to Annie wasn't his.

"Look here, K. K., if I let you stay, will you solemnly promise not to pry into my affairs or—the affairs of the—the neighbors?"

Joy glowed beneath the tears. "I promise I'll be the finest girl ever, Uncle Rod."

"I'll give you a try. May she stay, Annie?"

"If you want her, Rodney. The doctor said she should live out of doors this winter, so perhaps she'll be better off here in the country."

"Then hustle to New York, send down warm clothes for her and the bill to me. Take the servants with you. I'll pay them for lost time, Jean and I will be off early, perhaps before you start."

"Off! Where?"

"There's a circus in the next town and we—we are going in a party."

"A party! I see. I think I know who the party will be. I wasn't born yesterday, Rodney."

How he detested her wink, Rodney thought, as he watched her leave the room. Jean slipped her arm through her uncle's.

"She's mad!" she observed in a strident whisper.

"Cut that out, K. K. Never criticize your mother. You make good or you'll be packed off to New York on the first train. Get me?"

"I will, Uncle Rod. Cross-my-throat-an-hope-to-die. What time will we start for the circus? I'll be ready. I won't go to sleep for a minute tonight."

"I'll bet you won't. I'm not so old that I've forgotten the nights before your father and I went to the circus. Go to bed. Get going."

He watched her as she ran to the door.

"You sure have taken on responsibility," he reminded himself.

The next morning Rodney, with Jean snuggled in the roadster beside him, stopped before the red brick house. Prudence was waiting at the gate; her vivid lips were curved in a radiant smile.

"Good morning, Jean. I'm thrilled! My heart is so light it's bouncing along on balloon tires. Will there be room for me on the front seat, Mr. Gerard?"

"Cut out that 'Mr.'—Gorgeous. It doesn't click with a circus. Rod—to you. Of course there's room in front. Hop in."

Jean bounced in her seat. "Hurry up, Miss Prue. Let's go, Uncle Rod."

The main street of the town was already lined with crowds when they reached it; it boiled with children, echoed with the cries of fakirs, blazed with mammoth black and red posters.

Gerard parked the roadster on a side street. Jean's feet barely touched the ground as between Prudence and her uncle she was swept along in the hurrying crowd. She stopped short in front of a poster showing an equestrienne in rose-color tulle skirts and a brief bodice, with the caption:

MADEMOISELLE MILLEE

"Why, there's my cutie—" Gerard looked at her sharply as she bit off the next word.

"What do you mean, K. K.? You—" "Buy the kid a balloon! Buy the kid a balloon! Say, listen! What's a circus to a kid without a balloon?"

The hatless man with an unkempt mane of black hair and a flock of colored balloons straining at their leashes, blocked the way. Jean's eyes were like dancing stars.

"May I have one, Uncle Rod?"

"Sure. Choose the color. Have one, Prue?"

"Of course. I want that fat green one which looks as if it were about to burst from its own importance."

What fun she was! How friendly she had been on the drive over. Had she buried the hatchet she seemed always to have up her sleeve for him? She was so alive mentally and physically. Life never could get one by the throat if one had a girl like her with whom to travel through the years, Rodney thought.

"It's coming! The parade's coming!" Prudence gripped Gerard's arm. "Hear that bugle, Jean?"

Rodney pushed Jean in front of him. Crushed his arm against his side to keep Prue's hand there. Far down the street was a restless sea of waving plumes, shining helmets, brilliant flags. Music billowed forward. Snare. Drums. Cornets. Clarinets. He said to Prudence:

"The thrill of the Big Top. It's got

Prudence whistled:

"Don't look so agonized, Rodney. See, her eyelids are quivering."

"I'm all shot to pieces over this. I—I didn't know how much I cared for the Kurious—" Gerard choked on the words.

Across the room on the floor where they had dropped him lay the clown. Rodney Gerard bent over the twisted body, laid his hand on the dirt-streaked shoulder.

"You saved her, Chicot. Can you hear? You—"

"Let me in! Where's Grandpop? Let me in!"

A girl, in the cotton velvets and plumed hat of a circus rider on parade, burst into the room. Patches of rouge stood out like fever spots on her colorless face. Her black eyes were distended with fright. With a shriek she flung herself to her knees beside Chicot, put her arms under the old clown's shoulders, and lifted him until his head rested against her breast.

A spasm of pain contorted the grotesque face. The lids under their painted brows opened. He tried to put his hand over hers. It wavered futilely and dropped. His whisper seemed to fill the still room.

"Be a good—girl, Milly. You'll be a—great—rider—if you keep at it. I've kept you—with me—you're safer—now. I—must—get up. Time—for—my act—"

The last faint word fluttered in a sigh. Chalky lids drooped over dull eyes. The crumpled figure settled lower in the girl's arms.

"Grandpop! Grandpop! Don't leave me! I can't bear it to have you hurt! First I hurt you and now—"

The physician gently loosened the girl's arms and eased the body of the old clown to the floor. Rodney Gerard laid his hand on her shoulder.

Confederation Articles and U. S. Constitution

The articles of confederation conferred upon congress none but the delegated powers and recognized the absolute sovereignty of the states, notes a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Aside from the right to make war and peace, regulate foreign intercourse, receive and send ambassadors, control and coinage of money, and settle disputed boundaries, congress had no power to act without the consent of nine of the states, each casting one ballot. It could not levy taxes, and before 1787 the war debt had destroyed the financial reputation of the United States abroad.

The states were divided in their interests, and at the last Colonial congress but eight of the states sent delegates. Not the least of the weaknesses of the confederation was the nonprovision of a chief magistrate, or for a national judiciary.

To meet these needs it was found necessary to frame a new Constitution, systematically organizing a permanent form of government.

This document arranges the powers of government under three heads—legislative, executive and judicial—and places the supreme power in the people of the whole country, instead of vainly endeavoring to maintain a multitude of independent states. It replaced a disjointed confederacy of jealous states with a nation.

Calloway's taunting voice at his shoulder sent the blood in Rodney Gerard's body rushing to his ears in blinding, black anger. His furious eyes met the mocking eyes on a level with his.

"Shut up, Calloway! You—" "Take mine, Chicot! Take mine!"

Jean's excited voice cut into her uncle's. She darted forward. Rodney grabbed for her. Missed. The motorcycle clown, looking back in a parting wisecrack, shot forward at full speed. The crowd shrieked. Chicot caught the girl. Flung her back with all his force. The panic-stricken cyclist crashed into him.

Aeons after, it seemed to Rodney Gerard, the physician, bending over

Estimated Fifty Tons

of Diamonds in World

On women's necks and fingers, in the treasure stores of Indian princes, and in bank vaults and family safes, there are today more than fifty tons of cut diamonds, writes a United Press correspondent in Amsterdam, Holland.

This immense quantity of precious stones owned by the public throughout the world, weighs approximately 250,000,000 carats, and is valued at nearly $70,000,000,000.

"These figures may sound enormous," Johan J. Smit, Amsterdam diamond dealer, said, "but they are not out of proportion. The industry employs more than 500,000 men in the mining districts; 25,000 cutters throughout the world; 10,000 dealers in unset stones, and probably another 100,000 in jewelers' shops.

"And people are buying diamonds again," continued Smit. "Although the market for big stones is still somewhat limited, since the depression, the sale of small diamonds is increasing. For one thing, they are cheap now, and form a good investment."

Another boon to the diamond trade is its increasing use by industry. Electrical works, automobile factories, and various other industrial concerns employ diamonds for grinding and drilling. For these purposes the best type of stone is required.

Seeks Auto License Fee Reduction

The first bill State Representative-elect Charles H. Weber (6th-District) Chicago will introduce in the fifty ninth session of the Illinois Legislature will be for a reduction of the automobile license fee. The Board of Directors of the Chicago Motor Club are to meet within a fortnight to determine just what, in their opinion, the new fee should be. This organization has been studying this and other items of motorist taxation. It is reported they are anxious to have the legislature pass a proper flat fee bill. One that will cost much less than present requirements. Weber wants Illinois to charge a maximum of $5 per year or less for a set of plates.

Mr. Weber states that with the trend in Illinois to reduce certain taxes, one of the first to merit state consideration should be this state license plate tax. The Chicago legislator points out that numerous motorists had to store their automobiles this year for months and in some cases permanently because they could not pay the tax. If states much more in need of revenue than Illinois can get along on less annual revenue per pair of license plates than Illinois, this state should do likewise. In Illinois, Weber says the cost of license plates per annum are: $8 for small cars, $12 for those in the medium classes and $20 for those of high horsepower, whereas in the District of Columbia it is $1 a year; California, Georgia and Washington $3 per year; Arizona $3.50 per year and Nevada $5 per year.

"I want the help of every motorist in Illinois to get my bill thru the next regular session of the legislature," Weber says, "there are numerous reasons why it should be passed now; only one for its continued existence. The exorbitant license plates tax is mainly due to the fact that it is easy for the state to collect."

Opera Season Opens In Chicago

One of the significant features of the season will be the revival of German Opera, under the batons of the beloved Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and Henry Weber. "Tristan and Isolde" will be done with Stock as the guest conductor and will feature Lauritz Melchior of the Metropolitan and Lotte Lehman who has just been decorated by the Austrian government in the title roles. The season will be of foreign operas in foreign tongues with the single exception of Lawrence Tibbett's "Boris Godunoff" to be sung in English.

Performances will be held on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of each week, with a matinee and evening performance each Saturday. Beginning Friday, November 30, and continuing each Friday thereafter, the famous ballet of the opera will hold all ballet performances.

Next Saturday afternoon, November 17, "Turandot" will be repeated with the opening cast, with the evening performances devoted to "I Pagliacci" with Martinelli and "Cavalleria Rusticana" in which Anna Turkel, former candy girl of the Metropolitan, will make her American debut. On Monday, November 19, "La Traviata" will be given. Tuesday, November 20, "Aida," and on Wednesday, November 21, "Tosca" and on Saturday, November 24, "La Boheme" and "La Forza Del Destino."

Armistice Day was observed at the Orland M. E. church by a special sermon by the pastor, Rev. John Mullen who took for his text: "Blessed are the Peacemakers". In his discourse he pointed out that wars could only be brought to an end when the spirit of the Master and His teachings was thoroughly inculcated into every nation, into every race, when man learned to regard man as his brother and when "Love Divine ennobles every heart and Hosanas exulted employ every tongue." At the hour of 11 o'clock, every member rose in the pews and faced east in reverential memory to those who "had given that last full measure of devotion" while the pastor voiced the prayer that their sacrifice might not have been in vain and that war and its miseries should become thru the Love of Christ, a thing of the past.
